Hares: Leg Over & 'Er Indoors

Sanity Returns

After last week's chaotic shambles courtesy of Surrey H3, we were all looking forward to a return to normality, and were greatly relieved that the day's hares, Leg Over and 'Er Indoors, duly delivered. Your Scribe had come without his electronic assistant, and this report will be trawled from his reluctant memory, so don't expect too much detail!

A fine evening produced a good turnout, but we had to share the parking facilities with a large group attending some sporting event on the adjacent sports fields. The "On" was called, and the trail entered an area of interesting woodland, with a very joint-friendly route comprising leaf mould and pine needles on which to run. We eventually made our way out onto Hawley Common, which I was informed is military land, which probably accounts for why I recognised much of it, from previous Deepcut H3 trails. The trail followed the edge of Hawley Lake for a short period, which was unfortunate as the drains of the local housing estate must have been overflowing if the smell was anything to go by.

Hawley Common covers a large area, and much of it looks very similar. I quickly lost my bearings, but happily the trail was excellently marked, and we all got home safely in a thoroughly sensible time of around 50 - 55 minutes.

All agreed that it was well up to the standard expected (and a huge improvement on last week's Surrey offering!), the main point of interest being the apparent state of health of Little Prick's chest!

On-On

Affectionately,
